

The panzers, when they came

The panzers, when they came,
destroyed first love's flamboyant cavalry like summer's gold, scythed and thrown.

My private patriotism (Which is, our need for one-another) learns the pass-words of endurance.
The silk oxen stand waiting
For the golden yoke.